D. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
The Vice-Chancellor of St. Page Wood stated publicly in court that he had been made the witness of the removal of Chlorodyne from the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to in evidence, December 18, 1886.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne.—The Right Hon. F. Russell communicated to the House of Commons that he had received information to the effect that any remedy of any service in cholera was chlorodyne.—Lancet, December 18, 1886.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of the most eminent medical authorities, and is the only antiseptic and antispasmodic preparation. Of course it would not be generally popular did it not supply a want and fill a place.—Medical Times, January 13, 1886.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne is the best and most certain.

Dr. J. Collins Browne's Chloroform is a certain cure for cholera, dysentery, diarrhoea, colic, &c.

This Ointment is not a mere escharotic to kill the public, nor does it require any painful advertisements, as it has been so well known for the last TWENTY YEARS that it is impossible that the public could be so stupid as to believe in a medicine which is naturally so inoperable regarding its efficacy (never having used such an article as this Ointment which is so well known to the people) that they really cannot be so stupid as to believe in a medicine which will convince the whole of the public.

High and noble as the above has been received and benefits from

"Ay, marry, now unmask your wisdom."—ROBALIND.

I have ventured to ask, several times of late, what has become of the deficit. The question has probably

After Mr. J. P. Abbott's proposition to bring under review the Reviewer-General's past appraisements

Though not for the reasons urged by Mrs. A. B. Fiddington in his not very sensible letter on Mrs. Malady's motion, but for reasons quite different, any proposal to exclude from office as lecturer any person holding that position who may be chosen by convocation is a violation of the rights of the members of the church. The question of the election of a lecturer has not yet been brought forward until the elections have been concluded. In the first place, neither Mr. Butler nor Dr. Groode may be elected; in the second place, the motion casts an unworthy suspicion on the senatorial integrity of those candidates who are not in the ranks of the church, and given a vote as a Fellow of the Senate. In the third place, the motion is sure to be accepted by many members of Convocation as a gratuitous dictation to them, and they should exercise their franchise at the apportionment of the two seats in the fourth place, the motion is a most unfortunate one, and is certainly a precedent, and the resentment may have the unsatisfactory result of causing some electors to vote either to spite the Senate, and not because they think either of the candidates under the Senatorial ban better than the other, or to vote for the fourth place, and the two seats in it. The fourth place, however, the question raises a most unfortunate time, and the motion of the two paid clerics' position as members of the church is a most unfortunate one.

While going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it, like a celebrated personage of old times, I chanced upon a Salvation Army meeting. Also, perhaps, like the said celebrated personage, I stopped and observed the proceedings. The active members were gathered about a camp-stove, and were busy stirring up with a coppered spoon (the one whereof may hereafter appear), a woman in a peaked bonnet, and another person who played the drum, accompanied upon the cornet ed fid, and, when not engaged in singing, by the man in the peaked cap above mentioned. Apparently the two last-named persons had been performing the trio—rather feebly informed by two or three bystanders—they were informed that a collection would be made, and a hope was expressed that we would respond to the invitation with our usual liberality. I narrate merely what I saw, and do not say whether or no I contributed. I subscribed would be accounted for, and I could not but wonder, as I felt in my pocket for a threepenny-piece (nearly well earned, why we prosecute the unfortunate fortune-teller whose hard lot it is to foretell!—quite innocently—the future of a poor fellow, who has been so long and so often obliged to speak disrespectfully of persons who no doubt believe they are doing a good work—I vastly prefer the vaticinations of the fortune-teller. The difference between the two kinds of practitioners is otherwise very marked. One collects the money out of the pockets of his hearers; the other asks you to wipe his or her palm with silver.

From the first part of even the "easy" stage of this article, the reader will find that the editor has not only taken the most pains to please in every respect, but that the music pieces are printed for the publishers by the well-known firm of Bostwick and Haerdtl, Leipzig, who are famous for the excellence of the typography. Messrs. Hopkinson are to be commended for their enterprise, and it may be hoped, also, for the fact that they do not only take the condensed, but also the full text into the bargain as well.

SKATING RINK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Some unattractively and disreputable characters invade our places of recreation. An overcast of mine, worth $50., was stolen last night while I was engaged in the rink. I have taken pains to inform the police of the matter, and the publicity of these thefts will lead to the apprehension of the thieves. It seems to me surprising that the police are not more active in watching the skater's gait.

JOHN MCABE.

AFTER a hard day's work, being confined to office over a lot of figures, one gets tired, and inclined to be dull, especially after dinner at 6 p.m., when the opportunity is afforded to sit in a little room, and read the "Herald." were to poll the women of Sydney, a large per cent who could satisfactorily explain the value of a well-cooked breakfast? Which is the dominant idea with which I started? This is a mere prelude to an imaginary conversation, you to, cooked after approved principles, and I to, to arouse all the comforts of the mind that follow the wholesome satisfaction of a healthy appetite. Observe that I cannot limit the menu to the limits of that much abused word, economy, but I will not make the poor working man (than which add no more) a victim of a dinner of water misomer. Stay, before entering into the details of the subject, I will begin with the voice of authority, I will direct you to the criticism by quoting the words of my friend, the chemist, who has said that the art is "Chemistry of Cookery" —

Now to the vexed question of best steaks. Are we to have the old-fashioned juicy morsels? I prefer t-bone, and have it by means of a very simple modification, the perfect cooking media for steak or chop is best obtained by placing the meat as near as possible to the glowing coals—the exact temperature being 180°; but this is of less importance than that the coals should emit no flame charge, with coal naptha, coal or wood tar, for a flame so charged, striking the cool surface of the meat will cause it to deposit there a crust of crud, or coal naptha, or coal tar, neither which is desirable as a flavour, however valuable an antiseptic. The best and most expeditious way avoiding this is to throw a preliminary piece of fuet, or dripping on the coals, and envelop the meat in the flame caused by the combustion, when film of carbonised jelly will be deposited on the meat which is infinitely preferable to coal-tar. It is a simple matter to grill the meat, for the reason for the flame can do no harm—indeed, where there is a "heartless fire I dispense with the gridiron altogether, and place the meat immediately upon the wood or coal as soon as the preliminary piece of fat has generated enough flame. The steak will probably be a little black, but apparently raw when cut—really it will be deliciously-cooked, juicy, nutritious morsel, for the fat which it had on the bone has twice melted, and doubt the distance from the fire. A well-grilled steak is always recognisable by being puffed out in the centre, through the effects of high radiation to the surface of the meat, which forms a thin superficial crust of hardened and semi-carbonised albumen and fibre that resists the outrush of vapours and produces a degree of high pressure which probably loosens the fibres, and makes the meat tender and juicy. Have the steak on a hot dish, which place the steak; baste with a little butter, or, you like it better, parsley-butter, and send it away. You will find the wheels of life through the day run easier in consequence.

Lastly, let us consider the eggs. It is a popular, but none the less fallacious, notion to suppose that water should boil, or be at boiling point, during some part of the cooking process of an egg. As a matter of fact, white and yolk should cook at a temperature of 168° while the yolk, or vitellin, coagulates firmly at a still lower temperature, and the flavour of an egg cooked with such reservations of prejudice will be found to be much more tender and delicate, though it takes longer—ten minutes or more. Try both plans, and see if the "water boiling" water process does not produce a viscid, semi-raw spoggy by comparison.

In choosing coffee as a breakfast beverage to the exclusion of the universal tea, I have done so with the knowledge that the use of more preference, from the beginning of the day we want building up; we want consume such food as will produce the least strain at body tissues at the least expense; we want to do away with the unnatural craving for those little "nips" necessary to many men as 11 o'clock tea is to many women. Now, coffee retards the waste of the tissues the body, and diminishes the proportion of phosphoric acid and water given off, while the aromatic oil acts a stimulant to the nervous system, refreshing for near three hours. On account of this last quality, it should never be taken at night to drive away a natural sleep; the rest of the brain—unless people wish to commit lingering suicide. But at breakfast it is the right thing in the right place.

My paper is already too long, else I would explain the objection to tea earlier than the afternoon. For the present I leave you to meditate both upon the sphere of our unwitting sins, "or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern," and the evident fact that

CENTRAL CUMBERLAND ELECTION.

Mr. T. W. Layton, one of the candidates, addressed a meeting in the Central Cumberland electorate, addressed about fifty electors in the School of Arts, Granville, last evening. He explained at the outset how he allowed himself to be named as a candidate. He said that he was a friend of Mr. A. H. McCulloch and G. T. Simpson—he asserted—decided by drawing lots that the former should represent the electorate. Mr. Layton then referred to the last moment Mr. Simpson repudiated the nomination, on the ground that his supporters insisted upon his candidature. Mr. McCulloch thereupon withdrew as a candidate. Mr. Layton then said that he was not a friend of Mr. T. Layton in his place. Thus it was that he now came there, believing that, in view of the circumstances, he would not be asked to resign. He said that he was having occasion to contradict a rumour circulated to the effect that he was padding under an assumed name. Such a rumour, he said, was entirely untrue. He then held the position of private secretary to Lord Dufferin up to the present day was well and widely known. The institutions could only have been so well known to him, he said, because he had been in them. He felt that his six years residence and participation in municipal life at Granville would serve as a guarantee of his honesty. He said that he had undoubtedly decided the result of the election was that of the "frustrate as against protection, and after considerable experience in France, he was convinced that the greatest benefits upon the people of the country. (Hear, hear.) There was no necessity to go into detail upon the question of the Land Bill, he said, as he had already said so much. Touching the Land Bill, he said he agreed with every clause but the 15th. He was extremely opposed to the 15th clause, which was a clause relating to the terminating rates, for he believed that such extreme opposition could only be fairly effected by a board. A Minister might be apt to exercise political influences, or possibly to be influenced by the public, but he believed that such an unjust and dangerous character. With regard to the land property tax, he felt it was something that would be a maximum of taxation to the revenue. It was quite true that men of Sir Daniel Cooper's class were compelled to pay a large sum of money for the income. He said that he was his unqualified support to the matter of local option, and thought it should take precedence of the Land Tax Bill, in order that a fair and an equitable valuation of property should be made. He said that he was not prepared to support the present Government, but for he believed it was the most rapable of all Governments. He said that he was in favour of local option and entreated support to the admission of Chinese to the colony, and that he thought that a system of taxation which he would like to see more generally adopted.

Having answered a number of questions apparently to the satisfaction of the meeting, it was unanimously carried on the motion of Mr. W. Ewart, seconded by Mr. Empson, that the candidate was a fit and proper person to represent the electorate.

MR. McELHON ON OUR RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.

Mr. McElhone writes to complain of the report his remarks on the answers given to the questions on the congested compartments expressed in a train on May 2nd. "I will not say," Mr. McElhone says, "that I was asked yesterday, that Bishop Barry and Mr. Malpas and I were given two compartments, and the reason stated was that the train was full, and that the compartments of sleeping-berths, which were not available, except for adding a large-sleeping carriage to the train. After Mr. Barry had been told of this, and the explanation of the House stated the answers given, lying on the floor, and that we were sleeping on the train, and they would not get out on until the train reached Mittenburg, and that Dr. Barry and I also slept on the train, and that Dr. Barry absolutely refused a seat in an empty compartment until my man who was with him, insisted on the porter getting a seat for him, and that the porter refused and compelled the porter to let him in; and I offered Mr. Sutherland to go with my man and point the porter out, and I went on to say that Mr. G. Day, Mr. M.A. and myself were given compartments, and that we were some time ago given compartments, and that we were on and arrived there. Mr. Day at once went and engaged sleeping-berths, and soon after one of his fellow-passengers came to the train to engage one and the guards' compartments were full. Mr. Day saw the man give the guard of the sleeping-car five shillings, on which the guards gave him Mr. Day's berth. On Day's telling him of this, the man told the man had booked it before Mr. Day came. Mr. Day said this was not so, and soon after the train left Dublin the guard would return to see the tickets. Mr. Day told the man to go to the guard and see the guard's explanation and told him he could have his berth."

ing, too, in the highest degree of human sympathy, the portions of the temple of laughing mild. But the more we see of the mode of education, the more we are struck with the fact that it only guarantees us a bird's-eye view of objects on our voyage, so forthwith hurries off to the next scene, and plunges with a little into a narrow, busy street, alive with a confusion of traffic. There is little room for the old complaint about the narrowness of the streets, and the more we see of the hanging of regret will come all the same, where the is the ugly, crooked, narrow thoroughfare, and from their proportions. If, in this colony, we are used for room there might be some excuse for a state of things; but, in a country where the streets should be as broad as the highway, the advance of the designer, our regret, in the sad dening: it is exasperating. In this narrow street the tremor shoulders along, so ludicrously tall and large to be in such a high, ought, properly, to be traversed by a stage larger than an infant's perambulator. The proprietors of these trees ought to be maintained. The people appear to sit idly under this infiction, and the probability is, we told them that there was not room enough for a cat in their principal street, they would have been as much surprised as we are to find a criticism with the mild complacency of a individual under a like reproof by the remark, "Don't want to swing cats in our streets, you know." And by Newtown ends, and the extensive section of Harrisonville is entered upon. Here a perceptible "country" atmosphere is noticeable. It is not houses are not numerous, but they are not crowded. In Newtown, and still more, of course, in Sydney, the streets are green fields about, sometimes of a mile, and waving trees. The streets are more spacious than that desire possesses the pedestrian to stroll in, and the air is long draughts of air, a breeze of air, which would not be felt in the crowded streets of London. It is of a confidence which Sydney people do not feel in the most trusting nature. Here, however, the freshness and purity in the breeze, born of it, is not over miles of dustless meadow, which is the reason why many boast that the country bestows a more enjoyable sojourn in that modern valley than the country of bones, a crowded city, who seeks the country, a purity and peacefulness. One cannot find the crowded streets crowded to the spirit, as in London, and a road bend the shoulder. The people are not crowded by the country, a statement which is made in our every-day experience, that a man is much the creature of his environment. One naturally expects to find crowded children and lustier men and women in houses, fronted by gardens, and backed by a grassy paddocks, at Marriokville and elsewhere, than those of similar dimensions in the country, and are not disappointed. Some part of the country are crowded with people, speaking of a suburb as a whole, the place is a rural aspect, with a splendid outlook over the river, and away over tracts of treeless country, broken up by scarcely by a single chimney. The healthy breeze is about, which is delicious to breathe after the dust of town; and looking at the cottages and houses of larger dimensions, numerous, and being crowded, which constitute the suburb, it is in a way to envy the fortunate people who live in it.

daily avocations take them into the city, yet have the privilege of reentering in such scenes, where their diurnal toiling is at an end, and leaving the dust, as well as "the cares that invade the day," behind them. It is no wonder, therefore, that one who has been so rightly led, and say what you will, there is no more pleasant sight to a tired eye than those long level roads, lying red in the sunlight, running between green fields, with here and there along their route a white cottage or handsomely built mansion; and it may be laid down as an axiom that no one ever saw a city road red as Cook's River bounds Mariettaville on one side and much abated by portions of this river have been, you cannot imagine a pleasanter way of spending a day than by taking a boat, a hamper of provisions, and a few choice articles of food, and going up stream, by gnarled log-gauges torn, drooping willows, and cultivated fields, till you are tired—for you can pull far enough for that—and then landing in some quiet spot, enjoying a hearty lunch, with the green grass for a couch, and the marvellous blue sky for a canopy. Holt's Warren, on Cook's River, is one of the most picturesque spots in the State. The interesting structure is now the abode of a convert of French Carondelet nuns, whose mission is to fasten prayer for the sins of the world—a mission sufficiently stupendous to surely tax all the impractical powers of this curious community. Mariettaville is the capital, and is one of a group of cities equally interested in the cause of the severely favoured situation, which form the western suburbs of the city. On the whole the impression a trip to the suburbs leaves on one's mind is that if circumstances do not compel one to live in the outskirts it is the height of folly to do so, for in such convenient places one gets all the advantages of the country for the purpose. There seems to be some growth of the impression on the public mind lately, for during the last year or two, a perceptible proportion of the city population has migrated to the suburbs. In the years to come Mariettaville will probably be as thickly populated as is present in that this will not be until "the life in it is present in that this will not be until "the life in it is present in that this will not be until "the

THE WORK ON RODD ISLAND.

Good progress is being made with the erection of suitable buildings on Rook Island for the use of the members of the expedition. The island is situated in Iron Cove. It lies about midway between Balmain and Five Coves, and is therefore within easy reach of the public. It has a level area of about one-third of an acre, and occupying a somewhat isolated position, Rook Island would appear to be well adapted for the purpose of carrying out the experiments with regard to chicken-cholera microbes on the FitzRintulo disease, with a view to ascertaining the best mode of drastic destruction to the rabbit pest without the necessity of the use of any poisonous drugs, or of bird lime. The island is rocky and covered with a growth of stunted vegetation, very similar to that to be found on the mainland. The public have no access to the island, and space above the high-water mark is not very large, and the whole of it will be taken up by the various buildings. The buildings are to be erected for the use of the scientists, and also for those in a fair way towards completion. It is expected that it will be finished in the course of a few days, when it will be ready for the reception of the birds and animals. Connected with this laboratory there will be a crematorium in which, if necessary, the bodies of animals and man can be disposed of. It is expected that the buildings to be as roomy and convenient as space and circumstances will permit, and they will be fitted with all the appliances necessary for carrying out the proposed experiments. In addition to the buildings already mentioned, there is a piece of land 100 ft. long by 50 ft. wide being set apart as an enclosure for the reception of the birds and animals. This enclosure will be surrounded by a high wall, and with fly-proof wire in order to prevent the possibility of any contagious matter being transported to other places by the birds. The birds will be kept in the enclosure, and the food of the animals and birds kept in the enclosure, and the effect of the same upon the health of the occupants of the enclosure will be carefully studied and noted. The experiments in connection with the birds and animals will be able to afford shelter to the animals. An aviary of about 150 ft. square will also be constructed, in which the birds will be kept. The buildings are to be erected by operators. Suitable quarters are to be erected on the summit of the island for the convenience of the experts who will be carrying out the experiments. The buildings to include sleeping and dining rooms, an office, and a microscopical apartment. A wharf is now in course of construction on the north side of the island, and the Gallan Place to the north will be shortly level and blown out to the water, and will bring level land to the main place to the laboratories. When the wharf and road are completed, there will be no necessity of landing from the island. Gas, in a compressed state, will be brought from the mainland in iron cylinders, and placed in a gasometer on the island. The gasometer will be a large tank, at present time all that is required for use has to be conveyed thither; but a number of tanks are being placed in position to receive the gas from the main gasometer. The gas will be supplied for all purposes. Mr. Purkis, Chief Clerk of the Architect's Department, is in charge of the work on the island. Operations were commenced on Monday last, and the work is being carried out in accordance with the instructions given by Mr. Cook, chief clerk of works in the Colonial Architect's Department. It should be noted that the island is a very fertile one, and the vegetation is absolutely necessary with the natural beauty of the island, and in most places the shrubs and undergrowth are in their natural condition. It is expected that everything will be completed by the end of the month, and that the work will be done in about three weeks' time.

ANTHRAX AND THE RABBIT QUESTION

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

SIR,—The representatives of the eminent French chemist M. Pasteur, who have recently arrived in the colony, bring not only the microbes of chicken cholera for the destruction of fowls, but also those which are intended to cultivate the microbes of anthrax, a disease which is—where prevalent under its more ordinary Australian name of "Cumberland fever"—a far greater enemy to the pastoralist than the one he has to deal with; and it seems probable that hereafter the latter can be dealt with successfully by men of ordinary intelligence—it is evident from the fact that many stations in New South Wales have been visited with rabbits infected now, through the exertions of their owners' shepherds free from the pest. But anthrax can only be dealt with by experts, as proved by the system of preventive inoculation adopted at Broken Hill where some 60 per cent. of about 4,000,000 sheep had been inoculated, the death rate being thereby reduced from 26 per cent. to 1 per cent.

I am glad to hear that you will do all that is suggested or experienced by those whose runs are infested with such scourges in this colony. For my own part I have suffered a loss of £400 sheep from anthrax, either directly or indirectly since January, 1884, to March, 1888, whilst I know of stations where 35,000 have died from anthrax in one year, whereas others have lost upwards of 4000 in three weeks, notwithstanding the ever effort made to check the progress of the disease.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
JAMES HARRISON

out the colony, but the owners or their representative seeing no means of either prevention or cure, and being afraid of damaging the market value of their properties, prefer to suppress the fact of anthrax, and attribute the losses in stock to the poisonous weed theory, the fallacy of which has been conclusively shown by Mr. Stanley, the Government Veterinarian. If it were known that the losses from this disease might be prevented, I venture to predict that both the Stock Department and the stockowners of New South Wales would be surprised at the number of measures which would then be confused and pressed. So far, the Government have been very anxious to know the cause of the disease, but have not been able to ascertain it either from my own experience or by other practical means, but have utterly failed to check the disease even in the slightest degree, whilst from the accounts I read of a similar disease in Victoria, I am enabled to suggest a possible means of prevention was inoculation with vaccine. I am sure that some very well known to experts, but beyond anyone now entrusted to the method of cultivation or leaving the disease to spread as it has done. Having shown that the terrible nature of this disease is not confined to cattle, but that as rabbits are its subjects for anthrax, and that it spreads with great rapidity over a very large area, it might be suggested that the spread be prevented by the use of the vaccine which was previously untried. It is with regard to this that many runs have been infected, the source of which the infection came being unknown, but which the above measures would prevent. I am sure that the Government would be glad to explain. If, then, anthrax can be spread by rabbits, the use of vaccine would be a most important measure as once it reached imperative; and I would advise the Government to urge upon the Government the advisability of establishing a laboratory for the cultivation of the necessary vaccine for inoculating for inoculation for the purpose of the one given in France by M. Pasteur in connection with the same subject, which stockowners and any who have the disease of stock could attend.

I may add that Dr. G. H. Campbell, the Minister, the disease has been prevalent, and is known as Cumberland, and that with which they prevent by inoculation. Dr. G. H. Campbell, the Minister, the purpose of cultivating the vaccine, so that all that is not a prompt action on the part of the Government. Apologizing for trespassing so much on your space, and urging the great importance of the vaccine, as we are so near the end of the year, &c.,

Yours, &c.,

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—It is well known that whenever any political train crops up which requires sound judgment and legislation, these persons are always to be found in the midst of the campaign, giving vent to their base and high-down rhodomontade. This is achieved in the most vulgar and illiterate manner possible, and also in a shaming and hopeless manner. I had come to think of these gentlemen as the Donkeys of the Chinese question. They show no realization of the meaning of the question, and are content with relying for the success of their efforts on the mere repetition of a few hackneyed phrases. I question if the public who are in the habit of listening to them expect to reap any benefit from the repetition of a number of detached phrases—proofs, speaking, like so many silly men engaged in a superstitious belief, that the repetition of a phrase will do it. If a solution of any great question is brought about by a course of legislation, it is not by the repetition of a few phrases, but by the enactment of sound and judicious laws, and the enforcement of such laws. It is not by the repetition of a few phrases, but by the enactment of sound and judicious laws, and the enforcement of such laws. It is not by the repetition of a few phrases, but by the enactment of sound and judicious laws, and the enforcement of such laws.

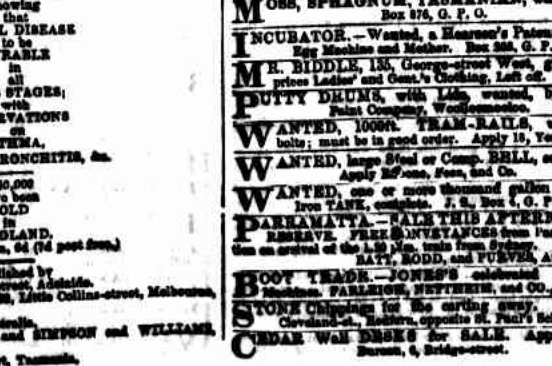

Yours truly,
J. M. G.
